Recent Barna Group research across ages and denominations found that 40% of unchurched Americans said that attending church is not important because they feel God elsewhere, while 35% said that church is not relevant to them personally. Barna claims that too often church has turned into individualistic and ultimately unfulfilling "Project Self" instead of a communal expression of God's kingdom on earth. Is this so? What would church as a community of believers look like? Join Jeff Oltmann and Ben Kaster for this two-week discussion.

Often the youth that HomePlate serves are disconnected from the wider community around them. In addition to other barriers, many of them can't afford recreation and group events that help them build support networks and show how life can be different. HomePlate started the Community Connections program in response to consistent feedback from youth who were seeking more opportunities to engage in the HomePlate community. This program arranges recreational and developmental programming opportunities; for example soft skill and team building, skills to access housing, outdoor adventure sports, and an annual beach trip.
